

How to Create a Realistic Content Marketing Plan

Accelerate Your Business Growth with a Content Plan You'll Actually Use

Student Course Book

Table of Contents

Introduction - Where You MUST Create Content in Your Business .....3

Module 1 - Set Goals to Set Content Priorities .....3

Module 2 - Who Are You Creating Content For? .....3

Module 3 - What Plan Can You Realistically Commit to? .....3

Module 4 - Create Your Editorial Calendar.....3

Module 5 - Planning for Future Growth .....3

Module 6 - Next Steps.....3

Sample

Introduction - Where You MUST Create Content in Your Business

Creating content isn't done on the fly. Small business owners don't get struck by inspiration and crank out blog posts that magically turn leads into customers. Successful content marketers have a process they use to plan their content over the long-term for sustainable results. To count yourself among their ranks, you need a content marketing plan, and this course will teach you step-by-step how to create and implement one that you can realistically commit to.

So, what exactly do we mean by "content marketing?" A broad definition would be that it's a strategic approach to marketing, the focus of which is creating and publishing content that's valuable and relevant to your audience, with the intent to attract potential customers and retain them. The ultimate goal is to build a relationship with an audience of buyers and increase profits through content.

There are several reasons why you need a well-planned content strategy:

Content marketing is cost-effective

You need a constant flow of content

Content needs to align with long-term goals

Your strategy needs to be sustainable

You'll get excellent results through good planning

- Content marketing is an extremely cost-effective method compared to traditional advertising and, if done well, it works.
- You need a consistent flow of content that's highly valuable and relevant to your audience
- Your content needs to be aligned with your long-term business goals in order to get you the results you want
- Your strategy needs to be sustainable over the long-term so that it can scale as your business grows
- If planned well, you'll get excellent results out of the work you put into creating and publishing content

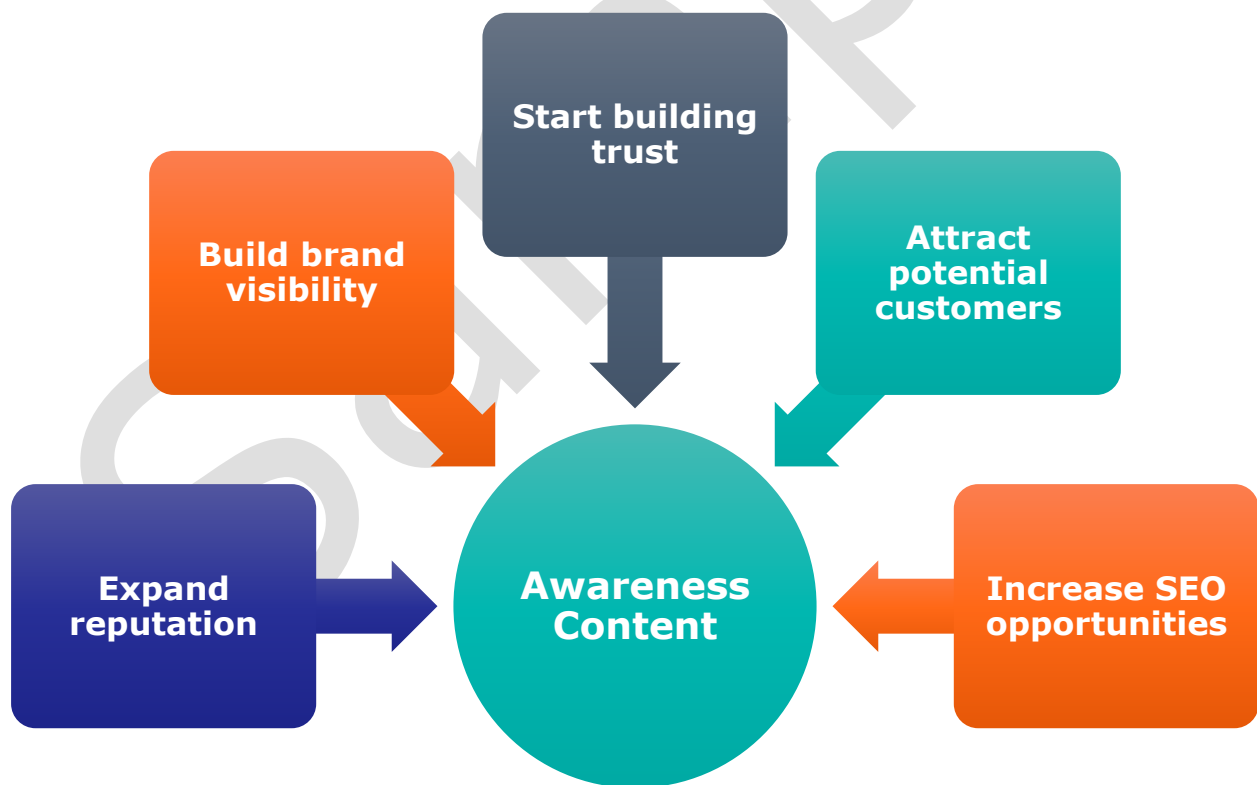

Many entrepreneurs and small businesses fail to create a strategic content plan because they fear they don't have time or resources, or they don't see an immediate impact of their efforts. But this is a long-term plan, so it involves planning well at the beginning to achieve consistent results later.

The Four Core Content Areas

In this course, we identify four areas for which to create content. The reason for this division is that there are different goals for content, and you have to create each piece with a goal in mind. Every business needs content in these four areas for an integrated plan.

1. Awareness Content

The aim of awareness content is to familiarize potential customers with your business. It's the wide entrance to your sales funnel. It aims to:

- Expand your reputation
- Build brand visibility
- Initially start building trust (although other areas of content creation will focus more on this)
- Attract potential customers or "tire kickers"
- Populate your websites, blogs, podcasts, and so on with content for SEO purposes

Awareness content can be anything that you put out in public, such as blog posts, podcasts, vlogs, social media posts, speaking events, and so on.

2. Lead Generation Content

The initial purpose of a sales funnel is to qualify leads. A lead is someone who has encountered your business, is interested in what you have to offer, and has started following you. If they're interested in learning more about you or receiving more of your content, they qualify themselves as leads. A qualified lead is likely to become a customer.

The purpose of lead generation content is to give potential customers a bigger taste of the type of content you offer. It builds your list of "warm" prospects and you can use this content to build and nurture a relationship with them that eventually leads to a sale.

Examples of this type of content include:

- Opt-in content, such as reports or resources, where a person provides their email address in exchange for the free content
- Webinars or seminars where you get contact information from participants
- Free membership sites where you can communicate directly with members, offering them further content and deals.

3. Paid Content

As the name suggests, paid content is content you sell for a profit. The main purpose, obviously, is for you to gain revenue. This is not just content you sell, but could also be content that promotes products or services that you sell. Whatever the nature of the content, its purpose is to generate sales.

This includes:

- Online courses
- Webinars
- Workshops
- Coaching resources
- Membership sites
- Sales pages
- Promotional email series

1. to happen next.

ATTENTION:

This is only an excerpt from our full course How to Create a Realistic Content Marketing Plan. The full, customizable course contains 6 major modules and Action Steps.

When you purchase a license for the course, you'll receive the editable files for the Course Book, Action Guide, graphics, social posts, and other resources.

Sample